through which community members would have direct influence in the governance and administration of the municipal police service.

Mayor Shikongo and police officers from the City of Windhoek and the Namibian Police recently visited Abbotsford, Canada, and were impressed by the harmony and integrated Canadian policing approach. He said that both the City Police and the Namibian Police should implement all the crime prevention strategies and programmes through an integrated approach, where both make effective use of the CCTV.

Since its inception five years ago, the City Police has emerged as a unit to reckon with, and this has resulted in the decline of notorious crimes. Prompt actions and responses by the City Police have resulted in Windhoek being rated by Professional Management Review, PMR, as the best organization in dealing with crime for the last three consecutive years.

"I am convinced that with the addition of the CCTV together, we will succeed in our efforts to fight crime in the City," said Mayor Shikongo. "The future success of the CCTV system depends on bring public services closer to the people, to enable all Namibians to participate in the process of governance and to have a voice in matters that affected their daily lives.

"This, we believe, is the essence of participatory democracy for which we fought very hard and thousands of our country men and women shed their precious blood and sacrificed their lives for," said President Pohamba.

SWAPO Party Vice President, Dr Hage Geingob, also addressed several rallies throughout the country, telling SWAPO Party supporters and sympathizers that there was no alternative to SWAPO Party.

"These political projects have failed," he told a SWAPO Party rally in Windhoek recently. "How can you trust a party that sleeps with the enemy? RDP (Rally for Democracy and Progress) is sleeping with the enemy. It has nothing to offer.

community support and confidence in the anticipated benefits."

He said that the purpose for which such cameras were installed should be known to the public and that residents were aware that they might be subjected to the CCTV surveillance. Sign boards have also been erected at various points in and around Windhoek, alerting the public about the existence of CCTV surveillance system. Nampol's Inspector-General, Lt General Sebastian Ndeitunga, applauded the introduction of the CCTV and called on police officers, both from Nampol and the City Police, to maximally utilize the CCTV system to ensure that there were no hideouts for criminals in Windhoek.

"The implementation of this unique project is another milestone, not only in the spectrum of combating of crime, but also in the history of our beloved country," said General Ndeitunga.

"Obviously projects such as this one require a lot of financial commitment. I would like to encourage our men and women in uniform to work closely and optimally utilize this facility to fight all sorts of crime tooth and nail so as to create a safe environment for people to live in.

"I am convinced that if the public enhances and continues to maintain the existing cooperation with the Police, criminals will not have any safe haven in our country.

The only party you should vote for is SWAPO."

During the campaign, SWAPO was the only political party that was visible everywhere, drawing huge crowds wherever a rally was convened, a sign that the party had members and supporters everywhere.

"We will defeat those political projects," said SWAPO Party Youth League Secretary, Cde Elijah Ngurare, at a SWAPO Party rally in Keetmanshoop recently where some people from RDP and CoD joined SWAPO. "Those political cockroaches have no future. They have nothing to offer.

"It is absolutely clear that RDP and CoD are now in a political intensive care unit, ICU, in the south. The floodgate is open and many of their members are inevitably going to join the mighty SWAPO Party.

"All the leaders of the opposition parties, including Chief Kuaimea Riruako, Chief Justus Garoeb, Hidipo Hamutenya, Ben Uenga and others, except Jesaya Nyamu, are welcome to join and make peace with their conscience. The time is now, if you don't make use of this opportunity, you will regret a regrettable regret."

President Pohamba said that the SWAPO Party government had made tangible achievements since independence, building roads, houses, clinics, hospitals, schools and providing water and electricity to rural areas.

"I wish to state that a vote for SWAPO Party is a secure investment in the future of our country, in the future of our regional councils, and indeed in the future of our local authorities. Therefore, vote for SWAPO Party. Vote for consistent and reliable delivery of services."

SWAPO party is a party with a vision and programs, now I am a
